Built at the turn of the twentieth century by German immigrants, the Button-Jannasch building has been home to numerous businesses over the last century. Located in the Haymarket Historic District, this building sat vacant for nearly twenty years, and was the last of approximately three buildings to be rehabilitated within the historic district. The rehabilitation of the Button-Jannasch building added to the revitalization of East Michigan Avenue, and demonstrates the importance of state and federal historic preservation tax credits to assist with small building rehabilitation.
